has done an outstanding job in applying his professional military knowledge to the peculiar and sensitive problems inherent to CIA type operations. He quickly acclimated himself to CIA procedures and has consistently performed his duties in an outstanding manner reflecting most favorably on the Department of the Army. His flexibility enabled him to adapt to new and changing conditions. This, plus his initiative and high degree of common sense and practicality, has made a most valuable officer. His willingness to accept responsibility in unique or strange fields and to quickly grasp their important aspects has singled him out as an outstanding officer in his grade who appears to have excellent potential for early promotion and to be fully capable of carrying the additional responsibility.
